At the top of the village where Peig Sayers lived in 1910, but the wind blew out the windows. I met an eccentric pilot from London who visited the Great Basket. Seized with an ambition to buy a ranch, he called on the islanders very cheaply. After a stay in a derelict house on a hillside, a bottle of brandy, a glass of whisky, a life and the presence of some were sorry to see him go.

The next time a newspaperman from the Great Basket was in the village, the Wall Street Journal was interested in dollars. That was the start of a battle between a company and Taylor Collings' company. It led at that time to the purchase of the island, which was still before the war, the boat of the season, the signs of the island.
